The objective of the present study was to improve the oral and dental health status among the adolescents of Rohtak, Haryana through assessment of oral hygiene practices, oral and dental health knowledge, attitude and behavior among adolescents. A descriptive cross-sectional study was conducted at Government High School, Rohtak, Haryana. A sample of 300 adolescents of 8-18 years of age were included in the study. The sample was selected using a convenient non-probability sampling technique. A pre-tested, semi-structured questionnaire was used for data collection. A two-proportion z-test was used to calculate the significant level of difference between oral health status of the students of Rohtak city and rural area. The statistical software Epi Info version 6.04d was used for data analysis. The majority of the participants were girls (60%) with the mean age of 12.66 years (SD 1.88). The majority of the students had used toothbrush on a daily basis (96.6%), had not used alcohol during the last year (95.7%) and had used an oral health education class. The majority of the students had used the toothbrush once or twice a day. The majority of the students brushed at least twice a day (76.3%) and never or rarely brushed between the teeth (97.3%).

The majority of the students had never or rarely used a mouthwash (72.4%) and had used a dental visit at least once a year (70.3%). The majority of the students used a dental floss once a week (78.7%). The majority of the students had never or rarely had their teeth professionally cleaned (93.6%). The majority of the participants who had their teeth professionally cleaned had used a dental floss once a week (55.6%). The students in rural areas had a better oral health status than the students in urban areas. Although tooth brushing and dental visit have been promoted as standard oral health behavior for many years, this study revealed that the majority of the adolescents of Rohtak, Haryana had not practiced good oral hygiene. It is strongly suggested that the health education program should be directed to the adolescents. With the passing of time, people are getting more and more computerized. Therefore, the significance of the required skills in the computer field is not less than it was a decade ago. Thus, we came across a number of ways to train the skills of a computer user.
