Urinary tract injury in the oncology patient. From this evidence we believe that patients with a known urinary tract cancer should be nursed in a semi-sitting position; in addition, preoperative filling cystoscopy can be omitted because it has a limited role. We also believe that laparotomy is not indicated, even if a port is present, unless the incision is below the umbilicus, then it should be left open in the 'closed' position to allow flatus and the risk of postoperative wound infection is increased. With a positive preoperative diagnosis, laparoscopic incision and a planned, low-energy laparoscopic procedure should be possible without any complications. Given these new findings, we think that laparoscopy has a definite role in treating an uncomplicated adnexal mass. Whether an attempt to remove an 'isolated' carcinoma in situ should be made in the presence of a heavy burden of disease has, as yet, not been answered. Percutaneous catheterization and catheter-related infections. The objective of this study was to analyze the risk factors and relative frequency of catheter-related infection (CRIs) related to different types of catheters. A retrospective analysis was performed in 900 patients treated between January 2002 and December 2006 at a single center for CRI and other urinary tract infections. The variables age, previous CRI, previous urology surgery, previous urology hospital admission, previous urology surgery, previous CRI, previous urology hospital admission, previous urology surgery, previous urinary catheterization, previous catheter-related infection, previous urinary catheterization, renal insufficiency, previous urinary catheterization, neurologic impairment, previous urinary catheterization, neurologic impairment, diabetes, previous urinary catheterization, diabetes, previous CRI, current CRI and the type of catheter were evaluated. Of the 900 patients, 650 (72%) had CRIs. The rates of CRIs in patients treated with a single type of catheter were 23% (85 of 377) with a double-lumen catheter (DLC), 36% (77 of 211) with a triple-lumen catheter (TLC), 29% (15 of 51) with a chemoport, and 11% (7 of 65) with a permanent urethral catheter. The rates of CRIs for patients receiving catheters for a median of 1.5 (1-3)

I would say that "entitlement" is something that has been made to be an actual issue by the bully and that the bully is behaving badly. Bullies use "entitlement" to make their bullying seem "legal". You are probably right. The definition of "entitlement" in the American Heritage Dictionary is the one I used above. I think it leaves out the possibility that the bully had a legitimate reason to bully someone. But when you consider that bullies do not often have reasonable explanations for their bullying behavior, then you can understand why the word "entitlement" describes a bully who is behaving unjustly, but leaves out the bully's subjective feelings of righteousness and justification.
