We are delighted to announce that D. J. White will join the Stan Lee Media Circle, and will be joining the Google+ and Amazon teams in their cross-country roadshow of conferences this summer. D. J. has been an incredibly passionate comics fan since he was a little kid, and has since focused his career efforts in life after comics into being a comic fan. He brings with him a wealth of knowledge about comics, and its fandom, and is excited to add to the group of talent that the Media Circle has. Read on for details about what D. J. plans to do, and let us know your own thoughts in the comments below. We recently joined the Google+ team for a series of conferences and panels, and D. J. White (aka D. J. Allen-White) was kind enough to pen a guest post for us. The original article can be read on our blog, written by Steve Fiffer and featured by Mike Cavenett. D. J. Allen-White on Google+ Here's a secret: I'm a big fan of Internet-scale social networks. The first social network, Friendster, hadn't even been announced when I began poking around the backwoods of web syndication for things worth reading, and I was living in the pre-Myspace social landscape. I remember every friend I made on Friendster, often thanks to a foolproof software-based redirect. My friends were mostly based around common interests — mostly, programming and comics — and we would eventually share many stories and opinions about the relationship between the
