Wind Power News A new wind turbine developed by turbine expert Turtec has for the first time achieved a rotational speed of over 100k. The turbine was developed to solve the problems Turtec faced with their popular 0.8MW turbine and designed with new geometry and a new high performance controller. The 200k turbine has a patented cylindrical interior-outer axial pin-feed rotor design that increases the energy density of the turbine's rotor. This structure also makes it easier to design and implement a variable speed control system. The new design also uses a unique tip-mounted grip for the wind turbine's three direct-drive generators. The result is a turbine which benefits from an innovative design and an advanced controller
