The Supreme Court is set to take up a politically explosive case where it will have to decide whether gay people are protected against discrimination under the 14th Amendment of the US Constitution. In a move that raised the hackles of religious groups, the Obama administration has argued on behalf of New York state in the case of Hollingsworth v Perry. If the justices agree with the administration, it will effectively legalise same-sex marriage across the US. The Obama administration wants the court to rule that existing states' marriage laws are unconstitutional if they prohibit the couples in question from marrying. In August, a federal appeals court struck down a state law in Utah that banned same-sex marriage. The Supreme Court is also due to rule on two cases arising from California, where same-sex couples have been granted the right to marry in a number of counties. Two other cases brought by various conservative groups, on the issue of same-sex marriage bans, are also on the docket. The first concerns a lower court ruling last year that barred the state of Oklahoma from refusing to issue marriage licences to same-sex couples, and the second is brought by Arizona, where the state has been defending its ban on same-sex marriage in court. A Supreme Court ruling will declare whether states cannot bar gay couples from being able to marry in their jurisdictions. Tuesday's argument revolves around Section 1 of the 14th Amendment which provides that all persons born or naturalised in the US are citizens and "are entitled to the same privileges and immunities". But the 14th Amendment also says that states can't "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws". No other constitutional amendment has been used to justify gay rights. If the justices support the Obama administration's position, it would be the first. The Obama administration's position is likely to be met with swift resistance from conservative legal experts. In the Perry case, 28 states with traditional marriage laws have intervened on behalf of the state of Texas and its ban. The administration's legal position seems to be that even if same-sex marriage laws are unconstitutional, the states can keep upholding them. That means states could still ban same-sex marriage and refuse to issue marriage licences even if the federal government mandates that they do so. Automatic operation of a power train of a vehicle may be desirable in certain circumstances to increase fuel efficiency or provide other driving characteristics. For example, a start/stop feature may automatically shut
