You don't have to be a spiritual person to think carefully about how we use the word "God" in our language. It's a word that has been associated with religious theologies, but most recently it has been co-opted in different ways in Islamic and New Age contexts. When we say "God is Love" or "God is with us" we are expressing a sentiment. Yet, when we say "God is the universe" we are teaching the philosophy of pantheism. Just as we would never say that "a baby is the universe" without qualification, I'm not too sure that saying "God is the universe" would be either accurate or good. I would say that when we use the word "God" in the way that we say "God is Love" or "God is with us" we are advancing a particular agenda. I believe that's not right, that we don't need to find a new word to express our modern religious beliefs. We can just speak the truth: "God is Love, God is with us, God is the universe, God is love, God is the absolute, God is the One, God is the Infinite, God is the Eternal, God is all of the above, and the above is all that is." But there are many who insist that we need to replace "God" with a new word, such as "Source," "Inherent Power," or the others that have been suggested. Here is how I would respond to that: The problem is that the only religious belief system that is perfectly consistent with the teaching of the New Testament is the one in which God is Love. Even the God of the Old Testament, who creates a world of chaos and then judges

(Omega on Game Grumps) "In addition to offering a deeply engaging story, Elden Ring's gameplay and aesthetic create a unique and wonderful experience. Here's the high-level idea of what makes it a great game: it has a combination of the engaging "heart" of a classic RPG with the accessibility of a good action game." (Bruce Lloyd on Steam) "I really like the characters in the game, and more importantly, I really like the way the voice actors have voiced the characters. They all do a great job, and it really adds to the immersion of the game for me." UTI was searched for in all microbiologic analyses in a geriatric ward. Matching two initial diagnostic criteria: presence of urinary symptoms with at least one bacteriuria. Analysis of data was performed using SPSS. The study took place in a geriatric ward of a French university hospital from January 2002 to June 2003. UTI were found in 56.4% (288) of 520 urological in-patients. The prevalence in women was 47.5%, for men 76.6%. The bacteriuria was isolated in 46.1% of patients. For my personal website I'm not interested in hiding the shareable URL, but I'm confused on how to make it easy for other websites to know it's my site. It's extremely important for me to have a set URL for my site, that's why I'm asking this question. A scenario would be when the user clicks on the facebook button from another website. I go into facebook and create a page for it, and a profile page. How can the website know the user knows it's my site that he just clicked on from? A: If users are required, to log in, before using the website, then you have a different issue (user logon is on the website side of things), that might be achieved using cookies, or some other form of HTTP authentication. But see Yohan's comment on your question, if that's a bad idea (particularly for password protection purposes).
