There is a new character called Caitlin. This is her backstory story of how she became an agent. It's written by an aspiring science fiction author. A small intro mini story game to introduce Caitlin. The End. Controls: WASD mouse controls. R to roll. F to jump. Press space to teleport. "Bill:" Bill is Caitlin's partner. He's a Game Master for Starcross. He acts as an interface between players and the game. Tutorial: To control Caitlin, right click your mouse and hold it to make her walk. You also have to press space to put Caitlin on all her powers. Caitlin keeps getting new powers. It'll soon learn if it's in range of the threat. Powers: There are a number of powers. They usually require Caitlin to pick an item up to acquire. Each power has a cooldown. You have to wait after performing a power for it to activate again. There are two types of powers, system and special. System powers are always active. Special powers depend on where your character is. (Example: If you walk up to Caitlin, she will use her Ace of Spades power.) There are also system powers called encyberships. To get them, you have to kill enemies. They come in blocks of 5. When you get a system power, it'll indicate how many more encyberships will be needed to get the next power. Each of the powers has a timer. When it reaches 0, it's over, so be careful. The game has a bit of a time limit. You have until the end to finish the game. Encyberships also have a timer. When the encybership is about to expire, it'll let you know. If you fall down a pit, you automatically die. Endings: There are three endings. You can unlock them by collecting certain items in the environment. There's a boss, who's the final foe. You play the good side. You play the bad side.

None of the endings occur from any power. Achievements: In addition to trophies and the story mode, there are achievements to earn. You can also choose a good or bad side. Control Cards: There are also control cards to collect. With them, you can walk around blind
