Today in the 9pm.. "I've downloaded the videos from the mobile site, but so far the commentary is in Portuguese.Q: Do the first few rulers of Hawaii actually have "credit" for this country? I know that you can't really speak of "original lands" before Europeans started trekking around the Pacific. What I want to know is, did the first people to settle in Hawaii actually get credit for it? I know Hawaii's a US territory and that the US claimed it, but as an "American" do I have a claim to it? Basically, I want to know who gets credit for founding Hawaii. A: Hawaii County is the only one of the 50 States that has a stonework county seal. The green color is meant to represent the earth. The stripes of light blue represent the sky. The stripes of white are supposed to represent the waters surrounding the islands, and the waves breaking on the shore. People of Hawai`i don't think that just anybody can come and set up a country there. It's something that comes with a King, who is symbolized by the Regent (green dragon looking at the earth on the seal). EDIT: As I said in the comments, it might be tough to argue that there's a claim to it - I haven't found any documents that explicitly show that there was a King here, but it seems that there were early settlers who definitely were Native Hawaiian. The earliest known inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands were a tribe known as the Hawaiians. These people, whose names are still unknown, learned to cultivate the soil, plant, work, and build houses in the land that became Hawaii.
