year it was made and the manufacturer's warranty as well as the exact time and location of the original purchase. Niche Lighting Niche Lighting is the most important part of any perfect lights scheme. If a fixture is without proper niche, chances are that the lighting will be considered weaker and less attractive. In addition, if a fixture without a proper niche isn't properly placed and adjusted, it may throw off the whole lighting plan. Accessories This category of home lights fixtures include floor lamps, tables, light fixtures, wall sconces, pendant lights, chandeliers, ceiling lamps, ceiling mounts, outdoor lighting and other lighting fixtures. If the lighting scheme is amazing, it is only the accessories that give it that perfect touch. If you're interested in buying the best home lights fixtures, make sure to get all the information about the product. Get reviews and comments about the product so that you would be able to make an informed decision. If possible, read the instruction manual on how to use the lighting.

Q: How do I programmatically save downloaded data to NSUserDefaults? I am downloading data from a website so I do this: `NSData *data = [NSData dataWithContentsOfURL:url];` I add the data to an NSMutableArray, then I loop through the array and set a header on each cell in the table view: `NSString *cellText = [NSString stringWithFormat:@"%@", [NSDate date]];` `UITableViewCell *cell = [tblListing cellForRowAtIndexPath:[self.myArray objectAtIndex:indexPath.row]];` `cell.textLabel.text = cellText;` and finally I do this to get the tableView to scroll down with the new content: [self.tableView scrollToRowAtIndexPath:[NSIndexPath indexPathForRow:0 inSection:0] atScrollPosition:UITableViewScrollPositionTop animated:YES]; My question is, how can I save the new data I added to the NSMutableArray so it is saved to UserDefaults? A: As Apple says, you should create a model object. That
