Thanks to @NigelHeck for setting me on the right track. Yerevan, Armenia - In the capital of Armenia, more than 200 people have been protesting against a proposed law that criminalises criticism of the country's government, and would prohibit people from stating the Armenian Genocide. On Wednesday, as demonstrators marched through the streets, others arrived from across the country to join the protest. "This new law is a danger. There are people who want to forcefully change our history. We have been in this situation before," said art therapist Mitya Elovznatsi, one of more than a hundred protesters gathered in front of parliament in Yerevan. The government is not making any concessions, but we will continue to resist until this law is dead, Mitya told Al Jazeera. 'You cannot rewrite history' One of the main slogans during the protest - "You cannot rewrite history" - is directed at the proposal from the ruling Republican Party, which is supported by President Serzh Sarkisian. The centralised law is being prepared in Armenia's parliament. If passed, it would add a new article to the Code of Criminal Procedure. According to the proposal, the government has the right to punish anyone who insults "the sacred memory of the Genocide", as well as anyone who states "the truth" that the actual number of victims of the massacres carried out during the Ottoman Empire's reign in the late 19th century was "hundreds of thousands". The protests have been organised by human rights groups in Armenia in order to put pressure on the government to reconsider the proposal. The government is not making any concessions, but we will continue to resist until this law is dead, M
