The effect of the alpha 1-receptor antagonist prazosin on hypotension in rats was studied following acute hemorrhage. Acute hemorrhage was induced by withdrawal of blood, by systemic bleeding under ether anaesthesia, and by ligation of the right external iliac artery. Prazosin pretreatment produced a dose-dependent increase in the blood pressure of animals surviving the hypotensive episode. Untreated animals showed a fall in blood pressure to approximately 50 mm Hg. Pretreatment with 1 mg/kg prazosin led to a transient increase in blood pressure to approximately 70 mm Hg which was independent of the preceding hypotensive episode. The hypotensive effect of acute hemorrhage was delayed by approximately 20 min and was accompanied by a return in blood pressure to approximately 65 mm Hg. The hypotensive effect of acute bleeding was reduced by approximately 25-30% in animals pretreated with 0.75 mg/kg prazosin. Prazosin treatment had no effect on the hematocrit and on the plasma levels of catecholamines. These findings indicate that alpha 1-receptor antagonism by prazosin protects against the hypotensive effect of acute hemorrhage.Kochi, the red flag of Kerala has appeared on WhatsApp's lobby bar, with users commenting against the Chief Minister's controversial comments about Padmaavat.
