This release is a minor update, but it introduces some changes and bugs that will break some blogs that use heavily-customized templates. Some users are reporting their themes and extensions working fine after updating, but the writers behind WP Engine and other popular sites hosted on WordPress.org tell a different story. They claim that this version of the software introduces new errors and problems that destroy customized templates. The issue seems to be caused by a new function in WordPress 3.8.1. It alters the behavior of plugins and is similar to a small, subtle update that added a new function to WordPress. For now, the team leading the growth of the free world has disabled this function for all sites on WordPress.org. However, they recommend waiting until this issue is fixed. The new WordPress 3.8.1 update introduces a new way to search for posts, as well as minor improvements to other functionalities. If you update your WordPress installation this week, please contact WP Engine to see if your site is among the ones affected. If this issue also affects you, you might as well wait until the team solves it. The action 6d1f23a050
