In my opinion, Lightroom was the best of the two programs at one point, but over the past few years, Photoshop has become more and more free creative tools. So, choice has become irrelevant and it really comes down to what you want and need. Adobe Photoshop is more of a toolbox that has tools for different types of project. It is designed for taking your images and manipulating them, while Lightroom is designed to work with your images and deliver them in a format that you can use as you choose. These are the most important features that you need to consider:

- Portable File Format - Lightroom saves your photos in LRW format. This is an industry-standard format that many experts say is safer than using Photoshop files. It means that the images are secured and can be shared with clients and other members.
- Functions - Lightroom has built-in functionalities such as creating slideshows, web galleries, photomerge, and more. Adobe Photoshop provides you with a lot of manipulation tools, but does not have the capacity to produce a slideshow. Another disadvantage of the Lightroom vs Photoshop is that it doesn't have the capacity compare adjustments.
- Quality - Lightroom is much more of a comprehensive tool to edit, catalog, enhance, and share images. It offers better quality when it comes to exporting.psd files. However, it is limited and it is not capable of providing consistent quality control (via custom actions) using actions. All new customers are given a free Gear VR headset when they purchase a subscription to Lightroom based on their geographic location. This is a pretty nice value. Other than that it does not come with any additional features you would need for an editorial photo editing workflow.
