LEFT: My computer screen with a Windows 3.1 desktop and Windows 7 wallpaper, as I swiped over to macOS after a recent Windows shutdown. RIGHT: My MacBook equipped with macOS Mojave and the Apple Showcase wallpapers. I swapped back to the Windows version and tried it for a bit. I had little need for the tools Photoshop Elements provides, since my computer has more than enough RAM to run any program I run out of my 2017 MacBook Pro. The most useful tool to me so far is the seamless file management that supports editing within a web browser. I also use Elements for quick batch reductions and conversions. An experiment with a DLSR camera proved that Sidecar can also be used to share windows for tasks that require a larger monitor.

On two flights so far with some 4K video, I was able to get some 4K video edited in sidecar mode. However, the video was pretty slow to edit, so I didn't see any point in doing the video editing in macOS, unless I dock my Mac to a larger screen at my home office. The bottom line? Photoshop Elements is a good place to start for someone looking to get the most out of his or her DLSR camera and is a great tool to have on hand if editing in a browser becomes a hobby. Since the software is so easy to create and post a great web page, in my opinion, it's perfect for the Average Joe or Jane who wants to make video with their camera. LEFT: My computer screen with a Windows 3.1 desktop and Windows 7 wallpaper, as I swiped over to macOS after a recent Windows shutdown. RIGHT: My MacBook equipped with macOS Mojave and the Apple Showcase wallpapers. BOTTOM: A high-speed montage of stills taken with a HDR-XR300 camera at the Kentucky Kingdom theme park.
