Photoshop cc 2015 is a must for every photographer out there. I've been using it for just at month and i believe Photoshps 2015 is going to blow the previous version. The new brush engine is the best one i have ever seen in any painting software. I believe the best way to explain to the average user why they must move to this latest version is by writing a few sentences about Photoshop's new Content Aware Fill. First, let me say that if you are a professional painter (or someone that works in the field of fine art / personal portrait) this feature could not be more necessary. Since the release of CS6 Adobe altered the work flow of Photoshop from the old paradigm of sure focus but first continue to edit and adjust image manually. Now the smartest pieces of AI and machine learning are still being developed and implemented. What's interesting is that photoshops creators don't really have a clue about what's occurring behind the scenes. Even with the most amazing technology in the world, creating great art still takes years of practice and visual awareness of the subtle differences between each tool and the creative personality of every artist. I know that Adobe Photoshop certainly isn't the first release of the week (like the latest App "Battery Gauge" which just released for iOS yesterday) and not the monster of the week/month/year (like the EOS 70D or the RX100M2).

BUT, I think that by presenting the most important things that we have done in the imageprocessing industry, the image making business and the photographer as a whole, I believe I can offer our readers the best overview of the past, present and future of the app/software, making it a great place for anyone who wants to learn more about this kind of topics.

The plan for the year ahead is to release a new version of Photoshop that is more focused on web usage and acceleration. The plan is to retire the previous version as soon as practically possible, as we want to save as much time as possible moving forward. By focusing our resources on this big update, we will also be able to spend more time thinking about new features that make work easier or more productive. This is also what sparked our interest in the new Web Graphics Workflow Toolkit from Microsoft — we are very excited and pleased to see Microsoft pushing native web-native APIs and better web performance — and this is the same approach we want to take with Photoshop moving forward. The new Photoshop will look towards the future and enable us to focus our full attention on our own native Web Graphics Workflow Toolkit, in which we have been working on and experimenting with for more than six months now. It is an exciting time for us to be in the process of designing and building a new Photoshop, and the new and upcoming versions of Substance along with HTML and CSS will be part of the Photoshop led future. Now that Photoshop for the web is on a path to be deprecated, we are also deprecating some of the legacy legacy features that weren't chosen as the priority for the future as the native GPU-based Photoshop tools have been gaining adoption. When it comes to websites and using photos and images, one of the biggest challenges is being able to help your customers deliver beautiful and coherent images across all devices. Photographic images differ significantly depending on the device they are seen on. The web has evolved and changed considerably over the years, and in the past decade, especially the gap between desktop and mobile has become significantly narrower.

This is a truly inspirational case study about the power of writing and storytelling! In the new years, I decided to share the story of the Oster SlimItbr through an eBook. We reached out to the SlimItbr crew for permission & they kindly granted us access to their user journey. One of the most interesting bits they shared with us was a case study from the Oster SlimItbr on Amazon's website with the user testimonial, "Seeing my name at the top of the results of Amazon's search for 'fitness tracker' made my day." You'll want to know that Photoshop's Price field will be in the new 2019 tools including Photoshop's native web browser. For more information about Adobe's reinvigorated web browser for the next generation of creative professionals check out acrobat.reader.pro . Returning features include a powerful new Mesh Warp tool for creating and editing 3D meshes, and easy-to-use item-oriented clipping masking to help lighten the load of professional designers. Content-Aware Fill is returning for millions use cases. As a library of fills, this enables users to insert limited text and graphics—without the need for extensive design skills—to create returnable text, and even organically overlapping imagery. Photoshop now has a canvas-based tool to edit, select and use content-aware brushes to intelligently insert empty space into layers without replacing them. Another new feature to help with efficient selection are the Selections masks. Instead of making multiple selections, simply mask them together.
