DCS A-10C II Tank Killer is the follow-on to the renowned DCS: A-10C Warthog, and it brings many improvements and new additions like the latest weapons, CagA-independent mucosal inflammatory response in Chlamydia trachomatis infection. Chlamydia trachomatis is a Gram-negative bacterium that causes urethritis, cervicitis, endometritis, and lymphogranuloma venereum. We explored the role of CagA, a type III secreted effector, in chlamydial-induced mucosal inflammatory responses in vitro and in vivo. Using an isogroup-specific real-time PCR analysis, we showed that CagA-negative strains expressed greater levels of tumor necrosis factor-alpha, interleukin-8, and interleukin-6 than did CagA-positive strains, both in vitro and in vivo. These results were confirmed by real-time PCR on CagA-specific probes and immunohistochemical staining. The mucosal inflammatory response to C. trachomatis in olfactory mucosa was similar in wild-type and CagA-deficient strains. In C. muridarum infected wild-type mice, CagA expression correlated with the influx of inflammatory cells in the olfactory mucosa and with the local production of CXCL1/Gro alpha. These findings suggest that CagA-deficient strains trigger mucosal inflammation through a CagA-independent mechanism.
